

squanderless.com

a family portrait using live data of domestic waste

This site documents the point of departure for objects jettisoned by a quintessential family of four — a virtual catalog of refuse. Each item is reimagined as a 'future fossil' with an archaeological record noting date, material, weight, user, function and color. The site does what we all do every day: it transforms consumed artifacts from private to public property. I am passing my family's garbage to you virtually, just as it becomes yours quite literally.
